

APPENDIX A: EXPLANATIONS OF THE GROUNDS OF NULLITY

By petitioning for a declaration of nullity, you are making an accusation that your marriage was invalid due to some factor present on the day you exchanged marital consent. Consequently, a petition for a declaration of nullity must include the reason for petitioning, that is, the ground or grounds of nullity on which the marriage is being challenged. There are three major causes of nullity, each of which can be further classified into several distinct grounds. A marriage can be invalid when there is 1) a defect in consent, 2) the presence of an impediment that rendered one or both of the parties unqualified for marriage, or 3) a defect in the form of celebration. Below is a list of the grounds of nullity, a brief description of each ground, and examples that help illustrate the ground. Please note that the examples are not exhaustive and that the grounds may be applicable in a wide variety of circumstances.

POSSIBLE DEFECTS OF CONSENT

Consent is what makes a marriage. However, certain people are not capable of truly giving consent because of some psychological obstacle, error, or lack of freedom. Others are capable of giving consent, but they purposefully withhold something essential from their consent or attach their consent to some external factor.

- Lack of Sufficient Use of Reason (c. 1095 1^o) Permanent or temporary lack of the use of reason due to a severe disability, mental illness, psychological disturbance, or intoxication at the time of the celebration of marriage prevents a person from making an act of consent.

Example: The bride is so intoxicated during the wedding that she is only partially aware of what is happening around her. Afterwards, she barely remembers the ceremony.

- Grave Lack of Discretion of Judgment Regarding the Essential Matrimonial Duties (c. 1095 2^o) In order to be able to consent to marriage, a person must possess at least a minimal ability to make a concrete judgment about the essential rights and duties of the marital covenant (i.e. permanence, fidelity, and openness to children). Substance abuse, psychological disorders, severe emotional imbalance, trauma, extreme immaturity, and other similar factors present at the time of consent can deprive a person of the ability to reason about the decision to marry. Factors like youth, pregnancy, or moderate pressure do not typically result in a grave lack of discretion of judgment on their own.

Example 1: On account of traumatic events that occurred in her childhood, namely physical abuse at the hands of her father, the bride suffered for many years from a severe case of anorexia nervosa, which not only affected her eating habits but also her psychic state. The psychologist who had been treating her attests to her serious psychological disturbances especially in her psycho-sexual identity and fear of motherhood.

Example 2: The groom suffers from a severe heroin addiction that started in college and persisted throughout the couple's courtship and engagement. Though he was sober on the wedding day, he used heroin the night before at his bachelor party and later missed the flight to the honeymoon because he was strung out on heroin. His addiction is so severe that he has no conception of a permanent commitment and abandons the marriage just a few years into it.

- Inability to Assume the Essential Obligations of Marriage (c. 1095 3°) At the time of the celebration of marriage, one of the parties is altogether incapable of taking on the essential obligations of marriage (i.e. permanence, fidelity, and openness to children) for reasons of a psychological nature. The psychological problem must be so severe that it makes it humanly impossible, not merely difficult, to take on the essential obligations of marriage. This impossibility can be caused by a mental illness, a psychological disorder, a severe addiction, or a strong homosexual inclination.

Example 1: From years of chronic alcohol abuse, the bride has so substantially impaired her psyche as to render her incapable of assuming the essential obligations of marriage at the time of consent.

Example 2: As a child the groom was sexually assaulted by a relative, and in his adolescence he developed a severe addiction to pornography, which led to the consumption of more explicit and demeaning forms of pornography as time passed. During the courtship and engagement, the groom was repeatedly unfaithful, engaging in indiscriminate sexual relationships. Even though he is firmly intent on being faithful to his spouse, his severe sexual addiction makes it humanly impossible for him to remain faithful, and as a result, he is repeatedly unfaithful throughout the married life.

- Fraud (c. 1098) A person's consent is invalid if it is given as a result of being deceived by fraud that (1) is intentionally inflicted in order to get that person to give consent and (2) concerns some quality of the other party which of its very nature can seriously disturb the partnership of marriage. The deceit can be perpetrated by the other party or even by some third party, such as a parent.

Example 1: The bride has extensive debts. She fears that the groom would not marry her if he knew about the debts, so she purposely conceals them from him in order to get him to marry her. The groom does not find out about the debts until after the marriage. When the debts are discovered, they cause a serious disturbance in their married life.

Example 2: The groom had polio as a child which rendered him incapable of having children. Knowing that the bride desires a large family, prior to the marriage, the groom lied to her by telling her that he is also looking forward to having biological children of his own someday. When the bride discovers this fact after the marriage, she promptly leaves.

- Total Simulation (c. 1101 §2) One or both parties has no intention to establish any kind of marital partnership, but has some totally unrelated goal that can be achieved through the appearance of marriage. The ceremony itself is essentially a sham.

Example: The groom wants a green card in order to be able to remain in the United States. He convinces the bride to marry him solely for that purpose. They have no intention to cohabitate or establish any kind of married life, except as necessary to convince immigration officials. The day the green card arrives in the mail, the parties separate, just as they had intended to do all along.

- Partial Simulation Against the Good of Children (c. 1101 §2) In spite of what the parties say in their marriage vows, one or both of the parties actually wills against one of the essential elements of marriage, in this case, the good of children. By its nature, marriage is directed toward bearing and raising children. By marrying, spouses give each other the right to procreative acts, even if those acts cannot or do not end up resulting in pregnancy due to infertility, age, etc. If, at the time of marriage, a party excludes this right, the party marries invalidly.

Example: The bride and the groom agree before the wedding that they will never have any children under any circumstance. They consistently use contraception throughout the course of their marriage. When they conceive a child despite using contraception, they choose to have an abortion.

- Partial Simulation Against the Good of Fidelity (c. 1101 §2) In spite of what the parties say in their marriage vows, one or both of the parties actually wills against one of the essential elements of marriage, in this case, the good of fidelity. As terrible as adultery is, it does not make a marriage invalid. But, if a party enters marriage while intending to be unfaithful, that intention makes the marriage invalid. In other words, the party must consider bigamy or adultery to be a right.

Example: The groom has a girlfriend on the side throughout the courtship and during the engagement. He intends to keep his mistress even after the marriage. Even though he does not want to be found out, he has no remorse whatsoever about this arrangement.

- Partial Simulation Against the Good of Permanence (c. 1101 §2) In spite of what the parties say in their marriage vows, one or both of the parties actually wills against one of the essential elements of marriage, in this case, the good of permanence. Marriage lasts until death. No matter how bad things get, even if the parties have to separate, the bond of marriage remains, making a second marriage impossible. However, if a party enters marriage while reserving a right to dissolve the marriage through divorce and potentially remarry, that party marries invalidly.

Example: The groom cheats on the bride during their engagement. The groom seems sincerely contrite, though, so the bride agrees to go ahead with the wedding, but also decides then and there that she will not commit to him unconditionally. So, she reserves the right to dissolve the marriage if the groom ever cheats again. Five years into the marriage, the groom cheats, and the bride leaves him immediately.

- Partial Simulation Against the Good of the Spouse (c. 1101 §2) In spite of what the parties say in their marriage vows, one or both of the parties actually wills against one of the essential elements of marriage, in this case, the good of the spouse. By its nature, marriage is directed to the good of the spouses. When spouses marry, they agree to enter a partnership that is ordered towards their mutual good. If one of the parties actually intends to enter a marriage that is ordered toward the harm or corruption of the other party, the party marries invalidly.

Example 1: The groom is an intensely selfish person. He asked the bride to marry him, but what he was really after was a live-in maid. The bride is also very wealthy, and the groom intends to spend her money on himself and leave her penniless. In his mind, the marriage is solely for his own benefit, and has no concern for the wellbeing of the bride.

- Conditioned Consent (c. 1102) One or both parties consent to marriage if and only if a certain condition is fulfilled. If the condition is not fulfilled at the time of the marriage, or if the condition relates to the future, the marriage is invalid.

Example: The bride is pregnant at the time of the wedding, and the groom is uncertain if the baby is his. When he consents to the marriage, he consents strictly under the condition that he is the father. That is the only circumstance under which he is willing to enter marriage. In his mind, the marriage only exists if he is the father. When the baby is born, a paternity test determines that the groom is not the father, and he leaves immediately.

- Force or Fear (c. 1103) When a person experiences force or grave fear inflicted even unintentionally by some other person(s), and this force is so great that the person feels compelled to choose an otherwise undesired marriage to be rid of the force or fear, then the marriage is invalid.

Example: The bride is pregnant. She does not want to marry the child's father, but her parents have threatened that if she does not they will cut her off financially and never speak to her again. She has no income other than her parents' financial support, and her parents' love and approval mean everything to her. She is afraid to lose them and afraid of ending up on the streets with a baby, and so she chooses to marry because it is the only possible alternative to avoid her parent's rejection and poverty.
